LOCAL LEGEND

Durham once had a bustling cattle market. The town grew into an agricultural centre with flour and saw mills and a major cattle market, before later becoming known for furniture and cement manufacturing.

Just outside of town - Allan Park

Those hills, ponds and springs weren't put there by people — glaciers shaped this landscape thousands of years ago.

In 1922, Durham-area box socials let ladies in free if they brought a boxed supper — which was then auctioned off to determine who got to share it with them!

It's basically 1920s dinner dating with an auctioneer.

Did you know?

Trains once ran right through town. Today's Heritage Walkway Bridge is a reminder of Durham's railway days; the old rail connection was an important part of the town's growth.
